(J) Courses Taught (in the order in which they were developed since 1979)

Intro. to Social/Cultural Anthropology

Slavery and Society (a graduate-level comparative seminar on systems of slavery and sociopolitical systems after abolition)

From Incest to Adultery: Kinship and Marriage in Human Societies (a middle level undergraduate course; includes social organization among primates, the question of the incest taboo, the concept of "blood," epistemological and political aspects of debates concerning the definition of marriage, bridewealth, and dowry, the political economy of sexuality, kinship terminology, and residence patterns)

Self and Others: Racial, Ethnic, and Social Classification (a middle-level undergraduate course largely about the construction and experience of social identities)

Graduate Core Theory Course in Cultural Anthropology (co-taught at Duke with Carol Smith; a double credit course, taking a dialectical approach to "political economy" and "meaning")

Caribbean Cultures and Societies (middle to upper level undergraduate course, with a special section for graduate students; stresses the historical, economic, structural similarities of countries in and around the Caribbean basin; international labor migration; Caribbean/U.S. interrelationship and mutual effects)

The History of Anthropology (an experimental course for senior citizens through the Duke Institute for Learning in Retirement)

Interpretations of Kinship (a graduate seminar on theories of kinship in relation to society, culture, semantics, gender, politics, modes of production, and epistemology)

Middle East: Wars, Revolutions and Social Change (a middle level undergraduate course with somewhat varying content; focus on Orientalism, the sociopolitical history of the objectification of Islam, the histories of collective identities in the region and their awkward relationship with European nationalism, theories and enactments of gender relations, traditional and experimental forms of family and household organization, the many meanings of religion and community, and their manifestation in revolutionary, fundamentalist, socialist, and military activities)

Meaning/Theories of Meaning (a graduate course; theories of meaning and interpretation; a careful textual analysis of approaches to the philosophy of language as background to interpretive approaches in sociocultural anthropology) (so far taught at Duke and at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem)

Ethniut veAdatiut (undergraduate/graduate course taught at the Hebrew University; two quarters on theoretical, analytical, and comparative approaches to ethnicity; one quarter on "ethnicity" in Israel/West Bank)

Symbols in Society/Theories of Symbolism (graduate-level course on theories of symbolism and semiotics, including Freud, Jung, Turner, Levi-Strauss, Douglas, Foucault, Bourdieu, and Schneider)

Ethics. the Other. and the Practice of Anthropology (also taught earlier as Issues of the 1980s; intended for anthropology juniors and seniors, and graduate students by special arrangement; an in-depth look at the ethical and epistemological issues surrounding discursive and non-discursive practices that characterize anthropology as a profession)

Evidence and Other Realities (advanced undergraduate/graduate seminar on the use and abuse of evidence; epistemological, political, and methodological issues surrounding the very idea of evidence; materials drawn from "the law of evidence," history of science, and feminist scholarship)

Strategies of Comparative Analysis (co-taught with Bruce Lawrence from Duke's history of religions; an interdisciplinary, large, high level undergraduate course required of Comparative Area Studies Majors at Duke; the traps and benefits of comparative methodologies; the relationship of data to evidence, theory to methodology, and research design to research question; the propositions of positivism and the nature of the critique within "interpretive social science" and critical theory)

Valuing Tradition and the Politics of Value (developed in the spring as a Freshman Seminar) a look at conceptualizations of "tradition," struggles to define them, and the significance communities give to them (in light of S. Rushdie, The Last Temptation of Christ, Barbara Herrnstein Smith, Joan Scott, Hobsbawm and Ranger, and M. Torgovnick's Gone Primitive)

Ethnicity and Nationalism: Ideologies and Processes (graduate-level seminar taught at UC-Santa Cruz; team research on countries other than the US examining intellectual and public theories as well as socioeconomic patterns)

Survey of Cultural Anthropology Theory (upper-level undergraduate course developed and taught twice at UC-Santa Cruz; history and sociology of knowledge employing professional anthropology as a case study)

Reading French Theorists (graduate-level, developed at the University of Iowa and now also taught at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign; focus on heterology, semiology, and social theory—including Durkheim, Levi-Strauss, Foucault, Bourdieu, de Certeau, Memmi, Todorov, de Beauvoir, Wittig, Godelier, Althusser, Derrida, Sperber, and Lyotard)

Inside/Outside "the Middle East" (undergraduate/graduate course developed out of my original Duke course on the Middle East; Internet use required)

Honors Seminar in International Studies: The Professions in the International Arena (co-taught with colleagues in history, the medical school, the law school, the School of Journalism, and the performing arts at the University of Iowa)

Anthropology and Contemporary World Problems (introductory level course developed at and for the University of Iowa); taught four times with three major segments entitled "A Framework for Looking at the Social," "Forms of Violence," and "Social (Dis)Order and "Family Values"; fundamentally rethought and redesigned in the fall 2003 with violence as the overarching theme through which I taught introductions to the history of anthropology, kinship and marriage, gender, race, racism, economic and political anthropology, visual anthropology, structural inequality, contemporary urban anthropology, feminist medical anthropology, the anthropology of the state, and field methods.

Seminar on Sociocultural Anthropology (graduate level introductory course required of all graduate students in anthropology; developed at/for the University of Iowa)

Foreign Scholarship on the United States (graduate-undergraduate level; developed at the University of Iowa, drawing on the experience and research drawn from running the International Forum for U.S. Studies; inverts the usual scholarly gaze by treating the U.S. as the foreign object of study)

Contemporary Anthropology (targeting upper-level undergraduates, with special provisions for graduate students) developed at the University of Iowa with the goal of showing students the behind-the-scenes work that characterizes very current anthropology (especially social, cultural, visual, museum studies, linguistic, medical); emphasis on late 1990s journal articles, books in press, working papers, conference papers and session proposals; presentations by conference organizers, journal editors, dissertation-writing graduate students

Contemporary American Lives: Experimenting with Social Science Methods (targeting upper-level undergraduates in American Studies at the School of English and American Studies, Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest; readings, observations, film analysis, media analysis, interviewing, Internet use)

Race, Racism, and Anti-Racism in the U.S. (first developed and taught in the Department of American Studies at the School of English and American Studies, Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest, spring 2001; then revised, lengthened, and taught at the University of Iowa in the spring of 2003)

Visions of America: Representations and Their Critiques (targeting doctoral students in the new Ph.D. program in American Studies at Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest)

Cultural Politics (targeting advanced undergraduates and graduate students; newly developed and taught in fall 2002 and offered again in Fall 2006)

Neighbors and Strangers: The U.S. and Cuba in the Twentieth Century (de facto co-taught this special fall 2003 interdisciplinary graduate seminar sponsored by our International Forum for U.S. Studies; course designed by our Cuban colleague, Dr. Soraya Castro Marino of the Center for the Study of the United States at the University of Havana; non-granting of U.S. visa to her required me and Jane Desmond to run the actual classes at the University of Iowa, while Dr. Castro Marino worked with students through email and Power Point presentations sent electronically beginning Week 3 of the seminar)

'America' in the World: Contextualizing the Lure and Rejection of America (first taught in Spring 2005; targeting upper-level undergraduates and graduate students across several disciplines; developed in connection with a U.S. Department of Education/Title VI grant, requested by the International Forum for U.S. Studies; and partly developed in collaboration with Jane Desmond; later taught in Spring 2009 and 2011 to upper-level undergraduates at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign)

Difference and Degradation--Is It All Just a Matter of Racism? (intense 3-week graduate seminar, meeting daily for 3.5 hours, 4 times a week, co-taught with Visiting Professor Balmurli Natrajan; explored legacies of extreme hierarchy and systemic discrimination, and the difficulties they pose for the seeker of social justice and the social or cultural analyst; pasts and presents couched in terms of "race," and the consequences of those legacies even for critics of those systems; scrutinized the impulse to view all such systems as racist, by exploring legacies of extreme hierarchy and systemic discrimination in India as well as the U.S. and South Africa. Course materials included multiple films, documents, and provocative books and articles)

Anthropology in a Changing World (version of introductory course taught at Illinois Spring 2008)

Interdisciplinary Approaches to Evidence (version taught at Illinois Fall 2008, targeting graduate students)

“America’ in the World: Contextualizing the Lure and Rejection of the U.S.” (version taught at Illinois Spring 2009 and Spring 2011, targeting upper-level undergraduates)

Social Theory/Ethnography (required year-long course developed and co-taught at Illinois, with Prof. Ellen Moodie, in 2009-2010)

Illinois Anthropology (2009-2010)—a 2 credit-hour, year-long course on the profession of anthropology, the behind-the-scenes, the process of becoming professional anthropologists, the skills and genres of writing required (totally redesigned from its earlier “meet the faculty” mode, and officially co-taught with Prof. Ellen Moodie)

Cultural Politics: Inside and Outside the U.S. (Fall 2011; version taught at Illinois targeting mid-upper level undergraduates, and including multiple guests and one longer-term guest instructor, Helena Wulff)

Social/Cultural Anthropology (Spring 2013 and Spring 2014; advanced introduction to sociocultural anthropology; required of anthropology majors in the sociocultural track but also a targeted elective/near-requirement of Global Studies majors and several other internationally-oriented interdisciplinary majors)
